Rally of Support for Jobs in London

Monday, June 29th, 2009, from 4 - 5:30 pm

The purpose of this rally is to ask the Mayor and Members of Council for their help and support during these tough economic times.

On June 29th, city council is deciding whether to raise development charges by $6,000 for all new homebuyers or freeze the increase to promote jobs and put families back to work.

We are asking the Mayor and members of Council to:

- help us get people back to work so they can support their families.
- defer proposed development charge increases for one year to provide a much-needed stimulus to the economy
- support the jobs of thousands of residential construction workers and associated industries
- show leadership and determination to work together in these difficult times

Come out and show your support!

We've all been affected by the downturn in the residential construction sector. Invite those you know to join you.

Rally materials will be provided, there is nothing you need to bring, just yourself and anyone who wants to show their support for jobs in London.
